

Contemplation

There is nothing more important than discovering what we are. A valuable means of accomplishing this end is contemplation. It works by paying attention to an experience and allowing it to bare the fruit of wisdom. Some of the taught methods of contemplation are:

The Siddha Path: The Siddha Path, also known as “The Siddhis” are an efficient means of evolution. By contemplating the qualities of God, we begin to perceive, and understanding reality more clearly. Our perspective quickly changes. Naturally, the power of Faith begins to arise in us. Over time, we begin to know ourselves as Divine.

Kuji-In: The Transformational Approach of Kuji-in is a modern day non-dogmatic adaptation of the system of empowerment used by the warriors of ancient Japan. Instead of invoking various Bodhisattvas, which now make little sense to our culture, we instead ponder the pure state of being that Bodhisattva would represent. Practice of Kuji-in leads to the acceleration of everything you do. It encourages you to become a better healer, psychic, warrior, and most importantly, a better person.

Five Elements: The Five Elements are the raw matter of which the universe is composed. Through invocation and contemplation we can bring these energies into our lives, healing our human experience, and giving us resources to work with on a scale that the human mind cannot imagine.

Holy Attitudes: By contemplating the attitudes of a Saint we can develop a Holy state of being. This will allow our point of view to shift in such a way to allow healing of long term inner scars. But healing is only the natural side-effect. We learn to enjoy life more fully, and grow closer to God.
